

Raising Independent, Conscientious, Well-Adjusted, Responsible Young Adults

Imagine being expected to make decisions for yourself from the time you are old enough to talk. Imagine being allowed to own increasing personal responsibility for an expanding universe of choices and consequences as you got older. By the time you start college, you know who you are, are self-confident, know where you'd like to go (at least for now), can pay your bills, do your laundry, cook for yourself, and own your own success. Knowing how to raise independent, conscientious, well-adjusted young adults is every parent's dream and imminently achievable.

► More about the Book:

Raising successful young adults start with giving them choices—the choice to pick the color of their pajamas when they were toddlers; the choice to pick their sport or activity in elementary school; the choice of what to spend their allowance on; the choice to pick their middle school, high school, and college; and ultimately the choice on how to become the person they want to be in life.
